TechTip

Formulation Matters!

Deciding which formulation to use is often as important as the selection of insecticide active ingredient. So how do you decide? Here are two questions to ask when making that decision.

- Is the formulation you selected effective on your target pests? This all starts with identification and knowing the biology of the pest. Questions such as "Does this insect live in the soil or hide in cracks and crevices" will guide you to the ideal formulations for application site. Always check the label to see if the target pest is listed.
- What surfaces are you treating? No surface type is alike. A porous surface such as concrete will absorb an Emulsifiable concentrate (EC) quickly leaving no active available to manage your pests. Formulations such as CS (Capsule suspension) or WSG (Water soluble granules) will be more readily available for insects to pick up on these types of surfaces.

In addition to the factors above; storage life, ease of use for the applicator, available equipment, and cost per treatment should be considered. For help on formulation selections, contact your local Target Specialty Products office.
